What is the matter with the Goebel Election Law? Why are so many smart men condemning a measure which, it seems to me, will be one of the most humane and beneficial laws ever placed on the statute books of a Commonwealth? I have always been an advocate of immense power. The consent of the governed theory was well enough when the Republic was founded, because the hardy old pioneers and pioneers had become so expert with the blunderbuss and the burning feather beds that even the Indians found it a difficult thing to get their consent to being scalped.

But all is changed. We like to be governed these enlightened days of the tail end of the nineteenth century. We are not satisfied with the several thousand laws on the statute books and the hundreds of city ordinances enacted from time to time, but we turn ourselves into Trusts, labor unions, combines of all kinds, and rise ourselves if we disobey the laws of these new-crowned tyrannies.

In my opinion the Goebel Election Law steps right in where the Trusts and the labor unions leave off and takes up the story, as we penny-pinners would say. The author of that law, in his wisdom, saw that the people were getting tired of thinking for themselves and in the kindness of his heart he devised a plan to save them this onerous task. He thought the best way to take toward this end would be to relieve them of the necessity of voting. He knew that many of our workmen have to lose an entire day from work earning in order to get to vote, after having lost an equal amount of time in registering; and, being a friend of the poor, he decided to save them this loss of time.

When the walking delegate of the labor union says we must wait out and not work any more until he tells us to, out we walk. We don't care if we are starving. We get so much pleasure in obeying the man behind the blinds that we are just running over with happiness and thanking our lucky stars that we live in an age when the walking delegate does our thinking and decides whether we shall work or not.

TEACHERS INSTITUTE.

Now in Session at the Maysville High School.

GOOD ATTENDANCE YESTERDAY

Institute opened at 9 a.m. with singing, followed by Scripture reading and prayer by Dr. Mulroy.

Most of the teachers were in their places at roll-call.

Mr. Willis continued the discussion of "Mental Science," touching upon the following points: Consciousness, attention, habits, intellect, environment, temperament, etc. Putting the whole "heart" into the work is the best means of holding the attention of pupils.

Under the head of "Faculties," perception and conception were discussed by the instructor. The interest of the teachers in his address was evinced by the questions asked.

Recess 10:30 to 10:45.

"History." Mr. Willis introduced the subject by a talk on the true purposes in studying history. The chief purpose is that our lives and characters may be broadened and uplifted by the examples of great characters.

Mrs. Allen, in speaking on the topic "Teachers Part in the Preparation," urged the importance of thorough self-preparation on the part of the teachers. Mr. Thomas advances class discussion as a help in teaching this or some other subject. Mr. Kay thinks the teacher should not confine himself to a single textbook, but encourage the pupils to bring in all the information possible.

Mr. Hicks thinks politics may be very profitably introduced, especially if the investigation be confined to issues of the past. Mr. Thomas thinks it better to discuss the issue of the day if the teacher is able to properly direct the discussion. He would have the pupils discuss ideas and avoid personalities. Miss Goldsack and Messrs. Chandler and Woodward also spoke on this subject.

Mr. Gabby had the topic "Current Literature in the School." He advises the teacher to inform himself on current events; also to see to it that the pupils have access to papers that they may read for themselves. Mr. George Turnpseed stated that he had used a current events paper, The Educational Independent, to some extent in place of the fifth reader and found the plan worked well. Mr. Grimes thinks constant review the best method of teaching daily.

Mr. Wilson thinks the study of the lives of great men very profitable to the pupil. He would supplement this work with essays on great events.

Mr. W. T. Pollitt teaches United States History before Kentucky History. Mr. Dickey thinks it a good idea to introduce this subject orally to the lowest grades and continue it throughout the school life.</
